Claude House, (Annapolis Savings Institution, The Galley, Tiny Treasures, Alberto's)

Architectural Survey File

This is the architectural survey file for this MIHP record. The survey file is organized reverse-chronological (that is, with the latest material on top). It contains all MIHP inventory forms, National Register nomination forms, determinations of eligibility (DOE) forms, and accompanying documentation such as photographs and maps.

Users should be aware that additional undigitized material about this property may be found in on-site architectural reports, copies of HABS/HAER or other documentation, drawings, and the “vertical files” at the MHT Library in Crownsville. The vertical files may include newspaper clippings, field notes, draft versions of forms and architectural reports, photographs, maps, and drawings. Researchers who need a thorough understanding of this property should plan to visit the MHT Library as part of their research project; look at the MHT web site (mht.maryland.gov) for details about how to make an appointment.

All material is property of the Maryland Historical Trust.

Capsule Summary of 226-228 Main Street (AA-587)

Built between 1840 and 1877¹, the building at 226-228 Main Street was constructed just south of Church Circle by members of the prominent Claude family. The building was erected as a residence and was sold, in 1897, by Dr. Abram Claude to the Annapolis Savings Institution, which operated a bank in the building. The construction of the building in this period on formerly undeveloped land provides important insight into the physical development of Main Street.

The 2-1/2-story, three-bay brick building at 228 Main Street is located on the northeast side of Main Street just south of Church Circle and amongst a group of small, two-story buildings. Set upon a brick foundation, the former dwelling is constructed of brick laid in five course bond on the side walls and a random Flemish bond on the front elevation. The Federal-style building is covered with a gable roof, clad with asphalt shingles, and features a central dormer and an end chimney (rebuilt) projecting from the northwest side elevation. A single-bay brick hyphen, designated 226 Main Street and connecting the building with its southern neighbor at 224 Main Street, contains the stair leading to the upper levels, while a two-story rear ell, not visible from public domain, extends towards the rear of the lot line.

Built in the mid-19th century, the 2-1/2-story, three-bay brick building at 228 Main Street is located on the northeast side of Main Street just south of Church Circle and amongst a group of small, two-story buildings. Set upon a brick foundation, the former dwelling is constructed of brick laid in five course bond on the side walls and a random Flemish bond on the front elevation. The Federal-style building is covered with a gable roof, clad with asphalt shingles, and features a central dormer and an end chimney (rebuilt) projecting from the northwest side elevation. A single-bay brick hyphen, designated 226 Main Street and connecting the building with its southern neighbor at 224 Main Street, contains the stair leading to the upper levels, while a two-story rear ell, not visible from public domain, extends towards the rear of the lot line.

The front elevation of the original building (228) consists of a storefront on the first story, three bays of windows on the second story and a central dormer window at the attic level. The storefront is articulated by a 15-light projecting show window set upon a brick foundation and a single-light, cross-panel door which leads directly into the first floor retail/commercial space. Above the door and show windows is a projecting wood frieze board bearing the name of the store which recently occupied the first floor. A shed roof clad with standing seam metal projects from the facade of the building.

Built against the southeastern elevation of the original building and connecting it to 224 next door, is the stair hyphen, designated 226 Main Street. The hyphen consists, on the exterior, of a single door opening on the first story and an unornamented brick wall above. The entry door of the hyphen, which leads directly to a straight-flight stair providing access to the offices on the upper floor, has a replacement door with six lights in the upper portion of the plain wood door.

The second story has three symmetrically spaced, original 6/6 windows with wood sills and brick jack-arched lintels. Above the second floor rises the gable roof supported by a boxed cornice. A central gable dormer with a 6/6 replacement window adorns the wide roof surface. Like the roof of the building, the sides of the dormer are clad with asbestos shingles.

The interior and rear of the building were not accessible and were not surveyed.

The building was erected as a residence and was sold, in 1897, by Dr. Abram Claude to the Annapolis Savings Institution, which operated a bank in the building. The construction of the building in this period on formerly undeveloped land provides important insight into the physical development of Main Street.

The land on which 226-228 Main Street is located originally occupied a portion of the large triangular lot of ground designated Lot 73 on the Stoddert Map of 1718. By the mid-18th century, this large lot of land was divided into several parcels, owned by various individuals. Based upon the property lines, it appears that the property on which 226-228 Main Street now stands fell within two separate parcels.² Additionally this portion of the property included the northern parcel now occupied by 234 Main Street, while the southern parcel included the property now occupied by 226-228 Main Street. From 1765 to 1780, both of these parcels were owned by Nathan Waters. In 1790, Waters sold part of his property (the southern portion) to his granddaughter, Elizabeth Chisholm, who had married Archibald Chisholm. In 1787, Archibald Chisholm again divided the property by selling a 27-foot frontage of the property on School Street. In 1798, Chisholm was charged with one, single-story frame dwelling house and a brick kitchen, in bad repair. Neither of these buildings survive today.

Between the years 1799 and 1809, the ownership rights to the property were being examined in the General Courts, because of a petition submitted by Benjamin Harrison. The courts ordered the property be sold to the highest bidder at a public sale. In 1811 the property was conveyed to William Marriott. Marriott sold the property consisting of a house and lot within four years to Major

² This is based upon the lot histories conducted by Historic Annapolis, Inc. According to the lot history research, 230-232 Main Street fell in part within Section VI of Parcel 10 and in part within Section VIII of Parcel 10.

Samuel Maynard.

By 1833, Dr. Dennis Claude purchased the property in its entirety from Samuel Maynard.³ In 1855, Ann Claude obtained a portion of the property, without buildings on it⁴, as part of an equity proceeding. This portion of land corresponds with the two parcels currently occupied by the buildings at 224 and 226-228 Main Street. By 1871, Anne Claude had died and the property was transferred to her son, Abram Claude, Jr.⁵ The deed transferring the property mentions a two-story brick house on the site. The description of the deed reads, "beginning...at the southwest corner of the two-story brick house standing on said lot," indicating that the building at 224 Main Street, which is at the southern end of the property, was built between 1858 and 1871. It does not, however, preclude the existence of 226-228, which appears, in fact to be from ca. 1840. In any case, the building is definitely on the site by 1877, as it appears on Gray's Map of Annapolis.

The property remained intact until 1885, when Abram Claude divided it into two and sold the parcel on which 220-224 Main Street stands. Abram Claude held onto 226-228 Main Street until 1896 when he sold it to Annapolis Savings Institution. Although no deed records the transaction, it appears that Abram Claude had already been leasing the building to the bank as it appears on the 1885 and 1891 Sanborn Maps as a bank. In 1897, the building is still shown simply as a bank; by 1903 it is marked as Annapolis Savings Bank.

In 1905, the bank sold the building to James Edward Abbott and in 1908, James Edward Abbott sold it to Roy N. and Elizabeth H. Tydings. In 1908, the building is shown as being vacant on the Sanborn Maps and in 1913 it is listed as an ice cream store. In 1919, the Tydings sold the building to Morris and Fannie Sheff and in 1921 the building is shown as a cobbler shop. An historic photograph from this period confirms the building's use; it shows the building with a sign, C.A. Brady Boots and Shoes across it.

⁴ The deed makes no mentions of buildings on the site (Liber NHG 5 Folio 108).

The property remained in the Sheff family until 1964. The building at 226-228 Main Street is currently owned by Ronald B. Hollander and was undergoing renovation at the time of the survey in May 1994.

Between the 1st and 2nd storeys is a metal covered hood sheltering the office below which has been altered; the rest of the building is original except for asphalt roof shingling. 3 6/6 windows with wood sills and splayed brick lintels on 2 floor - had shutters. Above simple wooden cornice is steep roof with a variation on the perennial Annapolis dormer, the top of the window (6/6) is elliptical while the roof of the dormer is triangular - without returns). Unpainted, original brick can be seen on West Wall above roof of 230. Because of style and age - one of most important buildings on Main Street.
