Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

Mount Gregory United Methodist Church is located at 2325 Maryland Route 97, approximately one mile south of Cooksville in northwestern Howard County, Maryland. The church faces west toward the road and is a one-story, three-bay by four-bay frame structure with a rubble stone foundation, asbestos shingles with corner boards, and a gable roof with inverted-V-seam metal and an east-west ridge. The west elevation has a new steel offset double door in the center bay, with three concrete steps below it. The doorway has plain architrave and a lancet-shaped blind transom with beaded-edge vertical boards and two chamfered mullions that create smaller lancets. The frame is also chamfered, and it appears that the transom was never glazed. The end bays have a one-over-one double-hung Queen Anne sash with a lancet-profile opening, wood sills and plain trim. There is a date plaque over the door that reads, "Mount Gregory ME Church erected 1902." It is set in a frame that has two center beads and a beaded interior edge. The gable end has an oculus with four lights. The roof has exposed rafter ends. There is a shallow break in the gable end, where it projects slightly forward. The north corner of the foundation has a marble date stone carved, "August 14, 1898."

The south elevation is five bays with a center door that is metal and has six panels. It has head cut trim and a pent roof over it that has asphalt roll roofing. There are four typical Queen Anne lancet windows. The eave is open and has exposed rafter ends. The east elevation has a projecting three-sided rectangular apse that has a rubble stone foundation. The gable roof is lower than the main building, has an east-west ridge, and has exposed rafters. There is a typical Queen Anne lancet on both the north and south sides of the apse. To the north of the apse is an exterior brick chimney. There is a cellar entrance to the south of the apse that has a concrete foundation, asbestos shingles, and a gable roof with asphalt shingles and an east-west ridge. On the east elevation of this entrance is a pair of hollow core doors. On the north elevation, the foundation has a window opening in-filled with concrete in the east bay and another opening in-filled with a board between the west and west-center bays. This opening has CMU jambs. The first story has four typical Queen Anne lancet sashes. The foundation also has an in-filled window in the center, filled with concrete but with no CMUs. The corner boards have black paint below the white paint, and green paint below that, with traces of an iron oxide red on the wood that could be a primer.

The sanctuary is one open room. The floor is partially carpeted and partially painted wood that appears to be pine. It is tongue and grooved, is 3-½ inches wide, and runs east-west. There is half wainscot on the walls that is 3-inch-wide tongue and grooved boards with three beads in the center and a bead on the edge. The wainscot is topped with a quirked ogee and bevel above a torus and cavetto. The ogee and bevel appears to be used to hold the pressed metal wall covering in place at the bottom. The architrave is symmetrical with two beads in the center, an ogee to the outer side and a cavetto to the inner side, plus a bead on the interior edge. The wainscot is installed over top of plaster that is only visible at the edge of the windowsill. Above the wainscot is a pressed metal wall covering that has 5-½ inch wide vertical bands of lozenge moulding with fleur de lis. It is painted white and is face-nailed on furring strips attached to the wall, and it appears the furring strips are set on top of the plaster. There is a wide, pressed metal frieze with urns connected by swags and torches between. There are acanthus scrolls and a wide torus at the top of the frieze. The frieze is painted a dull gold. The gable ends have pressed metal with a pebbled finish. Above the frieze at the eave is a pressed metal cove, and the ceiling also has pressed metal following the gable pitch. This ceiling has a pebbled finish margin, a small rectangular band, and square panels over most of the ceiling. Above the door are beaded-edge vertical boards. The window sash are hung on cords and the large center lights are mostly frosted, though some have been replaced with clear or beveled glass. The small lights have a frosted pattern of large and small rosettes. The top sash is fixed with the lancet set in a square opening with plain wood in the spandrels. The trim is squared off, while the trim over the door has a lancet profile. The ceiling has a hatch at the west end, near the northwest corner.

The existing lights appear to be modern reproductions, and the pews are modern oak. The east end of the sanctuary is raised one step, with an alter rail. The rail has square balusters with circular-saw and planer chatter marks, has wire nails, and a moulded rail with a natural finish. There is an additional step up to the dais, which has a pulpit, lectern, and low wall, all with modern paneling. On the east wall, the wainscot is at the same level as the rest of the church, then is angled up to bring it to sill height when it turns into the apse. The wainscot only has a torus and cavetto at the top, and above it is paneling. The pressed metal frieze is carried around. The apse has a lower ceiling with small pressed metal squares. The altar also has modern paneling. The south wall, in the center, has the metal six-panel door with head cut trim, and this was clearly added later. The windows on the west have higher sills than the other windows.

The basement has a linoleum floor, modern paneling, and ceiling tiles. There is a partition wall that runs east-west in the center, with one large room on the south. In the northwest there is a large modern kitchen, with a restroom in the center that has a vertical board door that now has paneling. This door has a plain cast iron rim lock with a metal knob. In the northeast corner is a furnace room that has the same door as the restroom, and has older linoleum that probably dates to the 1950s, over top of concrete. There are CMU walls set inside of the rubble stone foundation. On the east elevation, set to the south, are hollow-core double doors that lead to the concrete stairs outside.

The lot on which Mt. Gregory United Methodist Church stands has had a long association with the African-American community in Howard County. As early as 1846 a black school, known as the "Warfield Academy" was constructed on this site, though the Baltimore lumber merchants, Coates & Glenn, were not paid and had to sue to recover the debts. The Howard District Sheriff took possession of the property and offered it for sale in 1851. The one-acre parcel and building was purchased by Thomas Hood for $587. The 1860 Martenet map shows Hood as the owner, but does not provide any other information. Hood sold the property to a board of trustees for $1500 in 1867, "with the buildings erected thereon heretofore known as 'Warfield's Academy' and now called 'Mount Gregory' . . . for the exclusive use occupancy benefit and advantage of the colored people or persons of African descent to have, hold, use and occupy the buildings that are now, or may hereafter be erected thereon as a school or seminary." According to a history of Mt. Gregory Church, about this time "classes were set up in a vacant, two-story stone building on the land, and Cooksville's black residents soon began meeting for Methodist services on the first floor." While it seems unlikely that the men who founded the "Warfield Academy" would have built anything as substantial as a two-story stone building for black education, church services were probably started around that time. The 1878 Hopkins atlas shows this as "Mt. Gregory Cold ME Church" and makes no reference to a school. Most likely, the original building was serving both functions for the community. (1)

The use of the school for church services was somewhat problematic, since the deed had set the purpose of the property as educational, but the Hood family removed these restrictions in 1899. This was no doubt related to plans to build a new church. The cornerstone was laid in August 1898 under the direction of the Improved Order of Sons and Daughters of Joshua and the National Progressive Order of Odd Fellows. There are two date stones on the front of the church, one for the cornerstone laying, and another set into the frame wall above the door, which reads "erected 1902." For unknown reasons the completion of the building was delayed, and no other newspaper account could be found to enlighten us on why the delay or who was responsible for the construction of the building. The building is a simple frame, Gothic Revival structure that has significant surviving interior finishes, consisting of pressed metal walls, cornices, and ceilings. The use of metal ceilings in small rural churches of this period was not unusual, but the wall coverings and substantial cornices were. The Penn Iron Roofing & Cornice Co. of Philadelphia was advertising "Sagendorf's Patent Sectional Steel Ceilings and Side Wall Finish," "for churches and residences," in the Ellicott City Times at least as early as 1895, but whether the Mt. Gregory congregation used it or another company's product is not known. There is plaster beneath the metal walls, suggesting that it was either added at a later date, or covers earlier walls; if the latter, then the church must have been an alteration of the earlier building, rather than a completely new project. It seems more likely that the metal was added at some time after the church was completed, and longer than the four years between the laying of the cornerstone and the installation of the second stone.

The school on the property burned in 1922, and was rebuilt by the school board. Cooksville Colored School opened for grades 1 through 7 in 1927, and in 1935 it was expanded to 11 grades, making it the first black high school in the county. This building continued to be used as an elementary school until 1964, and later was used by the county for storage. It stood just southeast of the church, but it, too, burned. The church pews and altar furniture have all been replaced in the 1960s or '70s. At an unknown date the basement was excavated to provide additional room for the congregation, and a stairway cut through the floor near the rear in order to reach it. A door was also added on the south side at an unknown date, probably for convenience since the parking lot is to the south. Neither of these changes has had a great impact on the building. However, there has been a plan for some years of demolishing the building and constructing a new one, elsewhere on the lot. There have been reports of a cemetery located on the property, but there is nothing remaining above ground to suggest where it might be. (3)

Circa 1898

The Mt. Gregory U. M. Church faces west on the east side of Route 97, just south of Miller's Mill Road. It is a three bay wide, four bay deep, one story high, gabled roof (running east-west) frame (covered with asbestos shingles) building, resting on a stone foundation, with gabled roof (running east-west) open belfry, resting on the apex of the gable roof, over the main west entrance.

Fenestration is gothic arched and double-hung, holding two-over-two lights, which are bordered by a narrow row of nine lights-over-thirteen lights, underlined by projecting wooden sills and encased in a plain wooden archivolt.

The main entrance is a double, rectangular entrance, surmounted by a blocked-in, gothic arched transom, all of which is encased in a plain wooden archivolt, flanked by gothic arched windows, similar to those described.

A small rectangular molding rests above the central entrance, with the inscription, "Mt. Gregory M. E. Church, Erected AD 1902". A cornerstone is inscribed August 16, 1898.

Mt. Gregory is one of the most notable black churches in Howard County, Maryland, with its roots going back to a black school, formed circa 1846, known as "Warfield Academy". Additionally, it is a fine example of the Gothic Revival Style of the late nineteenth century, constructed in frame, with a fine Victorian interior featuring its original pine floors, beaded wainscotting, chair rail and pressed tin ceiling and wall covering. Its exterior features, although covered by aluminum siding, are otherwise completely retained. The history of the congregation is important for two reasons: it reflects a common practice in the educational history of the United States and exemplifies the evolution of this particular community from one concerned with the education of the black man to the formation of a religious community. Not only does this Church remain intact, but log houses still stand, which are occupied by the families of the original trustees of "Warfield Academy", which anteceded and led to the formation of Mt. Gregory. "Warfield Academy" was a school or seminary "for the exclusive use, occupancy, benefit and advantage of the colored people or persons of African descent", formed circa 1846. The log houses, which still stand are located not far from the Church. One of these is HO-102, The Sarah Jane Powell Log Cabin on the opposite side of Route 97 and HO-181, The R. Hook Log House on Route 144, east of its intersection with Route 97.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Mt. Gregory U.M. Church faces west on the east side of Route 97, just south of Miller's Mill Road. It is a three bay wide, four bay deep, one story high, gabled roof (running east-west) frame (covered with asbestos shingles) building, resting on a stone foundation, with gabled roof (running east-west) open belfry, resting on the apex of the gable roof, over the main west entrance.

Fenestration is gothic arched and double-hung, holding two -over-two lights, which are bordered by a narrow row of nine lights-over-thirteen lights, underlined by projecting wooden sills and encased in a plain wooden archivolt.

The main entrance is a double, rectangular entrance, surmounted by a blocked-in, gothic arched transom, all of which is encased in a plain wooden archivolt, flanked by gothic arched windows, similar to those described.

A small rectangular molding rests above the central entrance, with the inscription, "Mt. Gregory M.E. Church, Erected AD 1902".

A four light, bulls eye, encased in a plain circular molding is inset into the gable of the roofline.

A corner stone on the north side of the west wall is inscribed, "August 16, 1898."

Another rectangular entrance, covered by a shed roofed, hood, is located in the center at the building's south wall, flanked by two large, gothic arched, nave windows, which are in line with the four similar windows on the north wall. Originally an old, square brick, interior chimney, was placed in this location for an outlet for a coal stove, which heated the building.

A gabled roof apse is centered on the east wall of the building and holds a north and south window, similar to those described. It now holds the sanctuary with its altar, where once a simple pulpit stood.

The interior holds a central aisle and two side aisles, with the altar inset into the apse. Originally the pews went directly to the sides of the nave with a single aisle only. These pews have been replaced.

The window moldings are fluted and mitred. Three inch beaded wainscoting runs around the perimeter of the nave, terminated by the original chair rail. A chain patterned, pressed tin wall covering, so representative of Victorian architecture, runs from chair rail to ceiling, terminating in, and bordered by a Greek urn frieze in pressed tin, which runs around the entire perimeter of both the nave and its sanctuary.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Mount Gregory is one of the most notable black churches in Howard County, Maryland, with its roots going back to a black school, formed circa 1846, known as "Warfield Academy".¹ Additionally it is a fine example of the Gothic Revival Style of the late nineteenth century, constructed in frame, with a fine Victorian interior featuring its original pine floors, beaded wainscotting, chair rail and pressed tin ceiling and wall covering. Its exterior features, although covered by aluminum siding, are otherwise (See description) completely retained. The history of the congregation is important for two reasons: it reflects a common practise in the educational history of the United States² and exemplifies the evolution of this particular community from one concerned with the education of the black man to the formation of a religious community.³ Not only does this Church remain intact, but log houses still stand, which are occupied by the families of the original trustees of "Warfield Academy", which anteceded and led to the formation of Mt. Gregory. "Warfield Academy" was a school or seminary "for the exclusive use, occupancy, benefit and advantage of the colored people or persons of African descent", formed circa 1846. The log houses, which still stand are located not far from the Church. One of these is HO-102, The Sarah Jane Powell Log Cabin on the opposite side of Route 97 and HO-181, The R. Hook Log House on Route 144, east of its intersection with Route 97. See item 7 for architectural worth.

History and Support

1. Mt. Gregory is one of some six black churches in Howard County, which date from the nineteenth century and are all tied to the black educational history of this area, as well as to its religious history. In addition, Mt. Gregory is associated with the family of Thomas Hood, one of the first County Commissioners for Howard County, who was instrumental in the formation and continuance of this black school and later its church. On the 3rd Monday of March, 1850 the Firm of Coates and Glenn attempted to recover in the Howard County Court a debt of $268.54, which had been incurred since September 5, 1846, from "Warfield Academy". The school was put up for auction by the Sheriff of the Howard District of Anne Anedel County, Mr. Charles Haslup, Esquire, who conducted a public sale of the property. Mr. Thomas Hood was the highest bidder at $587.00. It is thus documented that the institution from which Mt. Gregory was formed, was in existence in 1846.

2. Some years later, on May 2, 1867, Thomas and his wife Sarah Hood, conveyed a deed of the property to the Trustees of "Warfield Academy" (see title search for a list of names) with certain restrictions, to wit, "that said property should be used for school purposes only" . . . "for the exclusive use, occupancy, benefit and advantage of the colored people or persons of African descent". . . "as a school or seminary under the order, control, and direction of the said Trustees". This common practise of separate but unequal educational facilities for our black population in the United States was finally overturned in the 1950's by the Supreme Court.

3. By 1899, it was decided by those concerned, that the property should also be used for church purposes. The heirs of Thomas Hood at that time conveyed a deed to the Trustees of "Mt. Gregory" or "Warfield Academy" (see attached Title Search for a list of their names) lifting the restriction, "for school purposes only" and relinquishing any reversion to them of the property. In 1925, Margaret E. Dorsey and Albert N. Dorsey and the Patapsco National Bank of Ellicott City conveyed the property to the Board of Education of Howard County, since it was used as a black school under the county school system. By 1964 the Board of Education conveyed the property to the County Commissioners, who in 1978 conveyed a deed of 3.69 Acres to the Trustees of Mt. Gregory U. M. Church. The church and its congregation reflect the history of the area, many of whom, like the family of Albert E. France go back to the 1860 period, when a descendant of Albert E. France and slave of the Thomas Hood family, was freed and a log house constructed for her and her family. For these reasons, as well as for its fine example of the Gothic Revival and its architectural integrity, Mt. Gregory should be placed on the National Register of Historic Places, the State Critical Areas Program and any local landmark ordinance the citizens of Howard County may seek to initiate.

The original inventory form for Mount Gregory United Methodist Church incorrectly reported several pieces of the information relative to the Warfield Academy. This addendum seeks to address the following inaccuracies:

- 1) “The lot on which Mt. Gregory United Methodist Church stands has had a long association with the African-American community in Howard County. As early as 1846 a black school, known as the “Warfield Academy” was constructed on this site, though the Baltimore lumber merchants, Coates & Glenn, were not paid and had to sue to recover the debts” (Section 8, 2011 Inventory form).
- 2) “ ‘Warfield Academy’ was a school or seminary “for the exclusive use, occupancy, benefit and advantage of the colored people or persons of African descent,” formed circa 1846” (Capsule summary, ca. 1980 Inventory form).
- 3) The “1857” date in the Chain of Title from the 2011 Inventory form, and the correct identification of the Trustees in Section 8 of the original Inventory.
- 4) “Not only does this Church remain intact, but log houses still stand, which are occupied by the families of the original trustees of “Warfield Academy,” which anteceded and led to the formation of Mt. Gregory” (Capsule summary and Section 8, ca. 1980 Inventory form). The original Trustees of Warfield Academy were not the Trustees of Mount Gregory.
- 5) “In addition, Mt. Gregory is associated with the family of Thomas Hood, one of the first County Commissioners for Howard County, who was instrumental in the formation and continuance of this black school and later its church” (Section 9, ca. 1980 Inventory form).
- 6) “The school on the property burned in 1922, and was rebuilt by the school board” (Section 8, 2011 Inventory form).

There is no information to support that the Warfield Academy was created for, nor actually educated, people of color. It was created by an Act of the Maryland General Assembly in 1846 (Figure 1).¹ The original named subscribers of the Academy were Gustavus Warfield, Asbury Peddicord, R.D. Hewitt, James Sykes, Charles D. Warfield, and Thomas H. Hood.

In a newspaper article about the Academy dated March 30, 1850 in the Howard Gazette and General Advertiser, the editor mentioned educating “our children” in Howard County instead of sending them away, and a boarding department being planned (Figure 2).²

During the same time period, the Sons of Temperance, Salem Division No. 111 was advertising “their Hall” to be the Warfield Academy. They held a meeting there, were reported to be concerned about elevating “the moral tone of society,” and reportedly sent a petition to the legislature (Figure 3).³ The Sons of Temperance had African-American chapters, but not until after the Civil War.

In September of 1850, the Academy was sued by the Baltimore firm Coates & Glenn, represented by John T.B. Dorsey. The Trustees of the Warfield Academy had not paid its debts, possibly the ones associated with its expansion into a boarding school. The firm won a judgment in the amount of $650, and the Sheriff took possession of the Academy and offered it for sale. Thomas H. Hood, one of the original subscribers for the Warfield Academy, bought the property back at the Sheriff’s sale in 1851, as noted in the Chain of Title for HO-276.

In keeping with the subject and focus of this Inventory and property, Mount Gregory United Methodist Church Trustees purchased the land and building previously known as the Warfield Academy in May of 1867 for $1500 from Mr. Hood. It is incorrectly reported as “1857” in the Chain of Title originally prepared by Howard County in 2011. There is also no information to support that Thomas Hood was “instrumental in the formation and continuance” of the school or the church. The efforts of the Trustees were acknowledged in a June 30, 1867 report by Captain Samuel I. Wright, the Freedmen’s Bureau Quartermaster officer in Maryland. He reported that “A large stone building has been purchased in Howard Co. Md. for a large school there. This building was formerly occupied by the Warfield Academy (Figure 4).”⁴

The Freedmen’s Bureau, formally known as the Bureau of Refugees, Freeman and Abandoned Lands had been established in 1865 by Congress and was headed by Union Army General Oliver O. Howard. It became part of the U.S. Department of War, and five military districts were created with the South divided into areas. Maryland was included, and Howard County saw Bureau activity as did many other jurisdictions.

The deed indicated it would be “. . . for the exclusive use occupancy benefit and advantage of the colored people or persons of African descent to have, hold, use and occupy the buildings that are now, or may hereafter, be erected thereon as a school or seminary...” This 1867 date indicates the official beginning of African-American specific activities for the building and lot. Perhaps the eventual fate of the Warfield Academy will be discovered by other researchers. The African-American men who pooled their resources and money together in order to create a school and/or seminary for area African-Americans to use after the Civil War were the following Trustees:

Daniel White, mulatto, 35, as of the 1870 census D4

George Randall, mulatto, 35, as of the 1870 census D4

Henry Mathews, mulatto, 45, as of the 1870 census D4

Negro schools had been obtained from the demolition of the hospital. An excerpt from this report is shown below:

Under the direction of the Asst Commr [General Gregory] my attention has been principally given to purchasing and shipping materials for the erection of School Houses for freedpeople. Materials have been shipped to 27 School Houses, 16 in Maryland and 11 in Delaware. The principal part of these materials was taken from the 16 Hospital Wards purchased of the Q. M. D. [Quartermaster Department] last October. From 3 to 7 carpenters have been employed in the demolition of these wards from April 4 to June 15. Only one ward now remains standing, which is used for a Colored Old Women's Home. The expenses for the erection of most of the School Houses is borne by the Freedpeople. Nails have been purchased for 17 of the School Houses and lumber and other materials have been purchased for those at Elkton, Easton, Denton, and Potter's Landing, Md. Ten of the School Houses have been furnished through the Baltimore Association for the Colored People, the rest by the Bureau directly. A large stone building has been purchased in Howard Co. Md. for a large school there. This building was formerly occupied by the Warfield Academy.

The remainder of this report consists mainly of statements of expenditures, persons, and items transported. Every three months the Bureau spent about two-thirds of its appropriations (bounties
