Summary Description:

Site 18GA134 was first located in 1980 as part of Robert D. Wall's survey of prehistoric sites in the Western Maryland Coal Region. The site is a prehistoric lithic scatter situated on a small run, which flows into the nearby Casselman River. The dominant soil type at the site is Purdy silt loam. An unspecified number of test units placed at the site in 1980 yielded 1 projectile point and 10 lithic flakes. The projectile point is not a recognizable type.

Four days in the late 1980s were spent on test excavations at the site. Extensive soil augering was conducted on the lower floodplain in an attempt to locate buried components, however, the effort produced negative results. The Casselman River has meandered across much of its present floodplain, eroding away any sites which would have been present. The artifacts that were recovered were confined to the upper terrace deposits in very shallow, clayey soils. Seven flakes and 1 piece of cobble shatter were the only artifacts found during this investigation and the general conclusion is that there is too little remaining of the site to be of any significance.
